

Somewhere In Time: 170 Years of Missouri Corrections

The history of the Missouri Department of Corrections spans more than 150 years—from the humble 1836 beginnings of a tiny cluster of buildings inside a wooden stockade, to the modern prisons and programs in operation at the turn of the 21st century. This history includes the capital city's economic boon of convict labor; farming operations with crops, cattle and the famous and sought-after Missouri mule; the bloody riot of 1954; infamous and legendary convicts; and the recent decade of unprecedented growth.

The 300-plus page edition will include hundreds of photographs and fascinating narrative and will be the most comprehensive reference of Missouri Corrections in existence. New features in this update of the 1991 history book are:

- expanded narrative on selected historical topics
- more photographs, some previously unpublished
- fallen officer memorial page
- fold-out timeline of national, state and corrections history
- roster of documented employees from 1843 to 2003

Carl Austin Hall and Bonnie Heady perpetrated Kansas City's Bobby Greenlease kidnapping and murder on September 28, 1953. Since there was no federal execution facility, the pair were sent to Missouri State Penitentiary. The case put the penitentiary in the national spotlight when the execution took place December 18 of that same year. Heady was the only woman to be executed in the gas chamber in Missouri.
